It is no secret that I have supported the Atlantic Coast Pipeline since its inception. Having spent my career building infrastructure, I recognize the constant need to replace aging systems and to expand according to market supplies and demands. Far too many persons in our country do not support construction until the need is critical or until they need the service. They do not spend time studying the economy, but accept statements put forth by agenda groups whose funding is well hidden. Ever since the end of World War II, the United States has been in competition with a host of foes to promote freedom throughout the world. This can be accomplished only with a strong military and a strong economy. Foes of our country will lie, cheat, and steal to weaken us. Energy is fundamental to economic strength, so I believe that we should develop any the assets at our disposal. The old adage to "never put all your eggs in one basket" is always true.. The dismal record of government funding for infrastructure makes me glad that we have corporations willing to undertake the task. We should work with these corporations, not against them, or surely we will find ourselves "up a creek without a paddle"
